What is DISC?

DISC is the universal language of observable human behaviour. Research has proven that people, in terms of 'how they act,' universally have similar characteristics. The DISC model is a simple way for people to understand their own behaviour, identify other people's style, and adapt their communication for improved relationships and effectiveness.

By attending our DISC Accreditation you will also earn accreditation in the Workplace Motivators (WPMOT) values assessment at no additional charge!

What is Workplace Motivators?

The theory behind the Workplace Motivators instrument was developed by Eduard Spranger. In his work, Spranger observed that people could view the world and their interactions within it through six different "value lenses." Based on which of these "lenses" is strongest, we can determine a person's core motivators or drivers.
